

Case Study

NSPCC

Company profile

Company: NSPCC

Contact: Richard Walker

Title: Health and Safety Adviser

Continual development

The National Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children (NSPCC) is a charity campaigning and working in child protection in the United Kingdom and the Channel Islands.

Health and safety at NSPCC

In my new post the opportunity arose for me to revitalise health and safety training to keep up with a rapidly changing business environment. Therefore, a new training strategy was developed out of which was identified the need for external support in the design, development and delivery of H&S training.

Working with RoSPA demonstrates a commitment by the organisation to provide its staff and management with the best technical and authoritative guidance available.

Training employees

Financial consideration apart, I was fortunate enough to have been trained by RoSPA early in my career, and the memory of their professionalism and dedication to achieving success has stayed with me ever since.

“The RoSPA team show a dedication to the highest level of customer satisfaction and involvement, whilst the individual training consultants have worked alongside me to tailor and deliver management and risk assessment courses.”

Richard Walker

The NSPCC is the UK's leading children's charity, preventing abuse and helping those affected to recover.

