

HSE update for SGUK and RoSPA

Over the summer HSE has updated its website with a number of Business Case Studies aimed at giving small businesses an insight into how HSE's guidance can help in effective and proportionate management of health and safety. We have used an innovative approach, having developed a number of short videos that highlight a number of small businesses who manage their health and safety well. The videos were produced in partnership with Edge Hill University and can be found at <http://www.hse.gov.uk/business/index.htm>

We are continuing with our work on tackling workplace ill health, through our partnership work and other interventions across those industries where we have most concern, including planning some further targeted activity on work-related stress and MSDs. We have also undertaken further work on developing a high-level strategy that sets out HSE's approach on work-related ill health and we hope to publish this, following some further internal consultation, on our website around the new year.

Our 'tackling occupational disease' community site has now been up and running for over a year and we are currently running a short survey to capture views about how useful the site is and ideas for improvements.

The survey only takes 2 minutes to complete and closes on the 16th October. It can be accessed at:
<http://webcommunities.hse.gov.uk/connect.ti/OccupationalDisease/grouphome>